Disclosures:

- Funding for the data collection of the data used in this project came from a World Bank – Royal Netherlands Embassy Trust Fund and from AusAID. The data used here was collected with the cooperation of the World Bank, the Indonesian Central Bureau of Statistics, SurveyMetre (a surveying firm), and Mitra Samya (a facilitation NGO in Indonesia).
- None of these organizations had any right of prior review of this manuscript. The only exception is that one of our co-authors, Vivi Alatas, works at the World Bank, and of course in her capacity as co-author she approved the manuscript.
- My only relevant financial interest is that 3 of the co-authors here (Alatas, Chandrasekhar, and me) are currently working on a new project together on information diffusion over social media networks in Indonesia that may receive research support from World Bank administered trust funds. I do not expect to receive any salary support or other direct financial benefits from this project or relationship; the funding would go directly to support future research.
- One of the co-funders of the data collection for this project, AusAID, has also funded a variety of my other projects, with both previous and ongoing grant support. AusAID does not have a vested interest in the outcome of this study so this does not pose a material conflict of interest.
